

Bakeshop robbed at gunpoint Saturday

By Jared Taylor
Daily Staff Writer

A robber made off with the cash, but left the dough. An armed robbery was reported at 11:43 a.m. Saturday at the Old Home Bread store, 125 Kitty Hawk Dr. There were no injuries. "A lot of these places are targets of opportunity," said Ames Police Sgt. Randy Kessel. "If it's an out of way location, [the robber will] take advantage of the situation." According to an Ames Police press release, a store employee told police a white male entered the store, displayed a silver-colored handgun and demanded money. The robber left the store with an undetermined amount of cash, but took no baked goods, Kessel said.

The incident could be connected to other recent robberies in the Des Moines area, Kessel said.

Pam Litchfield, Ames Police dispatcher, said that all investigations are ongoing.

"We've seen that Des Moines has had quite a rash of armed robberies down there, so we have our investigator seeing if there are any similarities," Kessel said.

The robber is described as blond, 5'10" to 6 feet tall with a slender build and in his early twenties, according to the release. He was described as wearing a light-colored stocking cap, blue jeans and a black windbreaker-type jacket with white stripes down the sleeves.

Kessel said the store had no surveillance cameras to capture images of the suspect.

Charges would include first-degree robbery, a Class B felony, which carries a minimum sentence of 5 years and maximum of 25 years, Kessel said.

"Any time you use a defensive weapon like that, the penalty goes up, whether it's real or not," Kessel said.

Kessel said anyone with information regarding the robbery is asked to call the Ames Police Department at 239-5133.

Legislators back E-85 tax break

Lawmakers hope bill will stimulate economic growth

By Fred Love
Daily Staff Writer

Area legislators say they would support a bill introduced in mid-January offering tax breaks to Iowans who buy vehicles compatible with E-85 fuel.

Lawmakers say they hope the bill will stimulate economic and agricultural growth in the state, and encourage consumers to depend less on gasoline.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Steven Olson, R-DeWitt, and currently assigned to the House Committee on Agriculture, would grant Iowans who buy vehicles propelled by E-85 fuel a $2,000 income tax deduction.

Rep. Beth Wessel-Kroeschell, D-Ames, said she would support such a measure, but she would like to see more work done to encourage energy efficiency.

"I think it's one step in the right direction, and I would support it," Wessel-Kroeschell said, "but I think we need to be more broad when it comes to this area of policy."

She said she would like to see more encouragement of research done at Iowa's universities to develop new energy sources.

"Ethanol is a bridge, but it's not the final solution," she said. "I'm very interested in the research that gets done at the Regents institutions, and I'd like to see more implementation of what gets done there."

She said the state should utilize more research done in the areas of biodiesel, wind energy and hybrid vehicles that utilize two sources of fuel such as electricity and gasoline.

"We need to be more broad when it comes to energy, not just focus on one aspect like E-85," she said.

"I'd like a similar bill that would grant tax reductions for the purchase of hybrid vehicles as well."

Rep. Jim Kurtenbach, R-Ames, said he would vote in favor of the bill, but would also prefer the measure to encompass more than just E-85.

"As it's written now, I believe

This self-serve Heart of Iowa Co-op fuel station in Nevada is one of the few offering E-85, a fuel blend of 85 percent ethanol and 15 percent gasoline. Iowa legislators will soon consider a bill to provide tax breaks to citizens who purchase vehicles that will burn the fuel.

I would support it," Kurtenbach said. "I would probably have to amend it to include biodiesel products, though."

He said he thinks the bill would promote Iowa's economy from several angles.

"Those items do benefit agriculture by promoting ethanol, but the byproducts of benefiting agriculture are widespread," he said.

"This could benefit the auto industry by encouraging buying. It also encourages gas stations to convert to selling E-85, which is a costly process. So this is really more encompassing than simply agriculture."

Kurtenbach said he expects the bill to pass in the House, but he said the bill may not become a law for some time.

"This is the first year it's been pushed in Iowa," he said. "We anticipate two to three years to gain acceptance for a new bill unless everyone agrees on the concept, which could happen."

ISU researcher Larry Johnson told The Associated Press that approximately 100,000 cars in Iowa already are equipped to run on E-85, but "70 percent of the owners ... don't know they have that kind of a vehicle."

New keg registration law met with mixed opinions; Students critical of effects

By Frank Maistrovich
Daily Staff Writer

With the recent passing of a new Story County keg registration law, ISU students are responding with a variety of opinions — from ignorance and indifference to indignation.

Despite the new measure passed by the Story County Board of Supervisors Thursday that requires keg buyers to provide their name and address for sellers' records, and allows police to obtain the records 12 hours after purchase, students said it wouldn't affect their drinking habits.

Conor Hall, senior in health and human performance, said he's angry about the new ordinance, not because of its effect on alcohol, but because he is against any law that abridges freedoms.

He said that he believes the new law won't have any effect on alcohol consumption and that it is a waste of resources.

"It is completely ineffective, expensive, a waste and an abuse of government power," Hall said. "The only thing it is going to do is drive up can and bottle sales. I thought that [former President Ronald] Reagan tore down the [Berlin] Wall to prevent this type of thing."

Mario Hernandez, junior in mechanical engineering, said he goes to house parties about three times a month and that the new ordinance wouldn't have any effect on him, because he's already 21 years old.

"I don't really care. I think most people are the same way," Hernandez said.

"It won't change my pattern at all. I think people will get their alcohol no matter what. They will just get their alcohol some other way."

Democratic lawmakers unveil tuition program

By Mike Glover
The Associated Press

DES MOINES — A group of Democratic lawmakers presented legislation Monday that would help pay a portion of college tuition for low-income students who keep up their grades and stay out of trouble.

"We're very hopeful this program will get legs and pass this year," said Rep. Janet Petersen, D-Des Moines, one of the bill's architects. "The program will teach our students about personal responsibility, increase parent involvement in education and reward students who work hard and play by the rules."

The proposal is modeled after a scholarship program in Indiana, and is aimed at increasing the number of children who go to college.

The measure targets seventh and eighth graders who are eligible for free or reduced priced lunches, or who are in the state's foster care system.

Those students sign an agreement to maintain a "C" average, avoid drugs, alcohol and brushes with the law.

In exchange, the state will pay the difference between the cost of tuition and the amount of state and federal student aid a student receives. Eligible students would be able to go to a community college, one of the state's public universities or a private college.

A pair of ISU students said they thought the measure would help level the playing field for all Iowans who want college degrees.

"Sounds like a cool idea to me," said Bradey McDeid, a senior in liberal studies. "I think there's too much inequality in this world, and people born into shitty circumstances often have a hard time opening up opportunities, whether it's because they're from a poor family or they don't have a family at all."

McDeid said he thought the requirements for staying out of legal trouble were unfair, but he said most students with federal financial aid face similar circumstances.

"People who get federal aid lose it if they're caught with marijuana, so I understand why that would be in there," he said.

Catherine Teed, senior in elementary education, said she completely supports the bill.

"I think this sounds like a really good way to go," Teed said. "I think it's important to encourage kids who need help, to encourage them to achieve and give them a better chance at getting an education."

She said she agrees with the demand that students maintain a "C" average and avoid legal trouble.

Roberta Johnson, director of student financial aid, said

In Friday's issue of the Iowa State Daily, the article "Decorate your dorm on the cheap" inaccurately described furniture purchased at Goodwill and Salvation Army stores as being "complete with that old urine smell." The Daily retracts its false statement and deeply regrets the error.

less of an effect for him personally because of where he drinks, he said.

"A lot of drinking we do takes place at home and then we go to the party," he said. "It'd prevent me from hosting a house party probably, but I really wouldn't have done that anyway."

Jessica Burdette, graduate student in political science, said that she objects to being held responsible for the actions of others.

"Once you buy a keg, everyone could be held liable," Burdette said. "I don't want to be held liable if you go do something stupid like drunk driving."

She said she didn't think keg registration would have any effect on underage alcohol consumption.

Lawmakers announce college aid program although she hadn't read the bill yet, she supports opportunities for students to receive more financial aid.

"Any time we can get additional aid for our students, it's a good thing," she said.

Petersen said about 10,000 students would be eligible for the program.

"This would be a tremendous benefit to communities that have a relatively high poverty rate," said Rep. Phil Wise, D-Keokuk.

Sen. Jeff Danielson, D-Cedar Falls, said a companion measure will be introduced in the Senate.

Petersen said there is a huge need for the measure because the state lags in the rate of children going to college. She said rankings show Iowa 37th in the nation in the number of 25-year-olds with a college degree.

She said attending college is the best way to boost the earning potential of low-income students. Studies have shown that college graduates earn far more than those with only a high school degree, she said.

"We're going to help them break the cycle of poverty in their families, something that so many families so desperately would like to do," Petersen said.

President defends domestic snooping

By Jennifer Loven
The Associated Press

MANHATTAN, Kan. — President Bush pushed back at critics of his once-secret domestic spying effort Monday, saying it should be termed a "terrorist surveillance program" and contending it has the backing of legal experts, key lawmakers and the Supreme Court.

Several members of Congress from both parties have questioned whether the warrantless snooping is legal. That is because it bypasses a special federal court that, by law, must authorize eavesdropping on Americans and because the president provided limited notification to only a few lawmakers.

"It's amazing that people say to me, 'Well, he's just breaking the law.' If I wanted to break the law, why was I briefing Congress?" asked Bush.

One of those who had been informed, Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Pat Roberts, R-Kan., was sitting behind Bush during his appearance at Kansas State University.

Bush's remarks were part of an aggressive administration campaign to defend the four-year-old program as a crucial and legal terror-fighting tool. The White House is trying to sell its side of the story before the Senate Judiciary Committee opens hearings on it in two weeks.

Back in Washington, Gen. Michael Hayden, the former National Security Agency director who is now the government's No. 2 intelligence official, contended the surveillance was narrowly targeted. He acknowledged that the program established a lower legal standard to eavesdrop on terror-related communications than a surveillance law implemented in 1978.

Under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, government officials had to prove to a secretive intelligence court that there was "probable cause" to believe that a person was tied to terrorism. Bush's program allows senior National Security Agency officials to approve surveillance when there was "reason to believe" the call may involve al-Qaida and its affiliates.

Hayden maintained that the work was within the law. "The constitutional standard is reasonable... I am convinced that we are lawful because what it is we are doing is reasonable," he said at the National Press Club.

Hayden also rejected suggestions that the NSA rank-and-file had problems with the electronic monitoring, saying that the agency's independent watchdog told him Friday that "not a single employee" had registered a concern with that office about the program.

Democrats countered that many important questions remain.

"We can be strong and operate under the rule of law," said Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev.

"These are not mutually exclusive principles — they are the principles upon which our nation was founded."

In his remarks, Bush said that allowing the NSA to monitor the international phone calls and e-mails of Americans with suspected ties to terrorists can hardly be considered "domestic spying."

"It's what I would call a terrorist surveillance program," Bush said at Kansas State. "If they're making a phone call in the United States, it seems like to me we want to know why."

He said he "had all kinds of lawyers review the process" to ensure it didn't violate civil liberties or the law.
